$250 gaming stamp repealed, to take effect in 1980

Those who operate slot machines, video card games, or who run pinball tournaments will not be required to pay the $250 federal gaming device tax after June 30, 1979.

That special tax was repealed in the Revenue Act of 1978 (Public Law 95-600). The specific section of that law which repeals the gaming device tax is Section 521B.

Until July 1, 1980, however, operators will still be required to pay the special gaming device tax.

Under the old law, those who were also paying similar state gaming taxes were given a tax credit for up to eighty percent of that $250 per machine tax; but, according to Wilson Fadley, an IRS public information director, the new Revenue Act increases that tax credit up to 95 percent of the tax. Of course, when the new law takes effect after June 30, 1980, operators will not be required to pay any federal tax at all.

The gaming machine tax has been an especially difficult pill for operators to swallow because, in addition to slot machines, many other types of amusement machines were included under the regulation. Among those other types of machines which the IRS ruled were gaming devices were video games that played such card games as Black Jack and In Between, and, interestingly, pinball machines when they were used in a profit-making promotion (See PLAY METER, July, 1979, pages 65-66).

The peculiarity of this pinball ruling was that the IRS ruled that pinball machines used in a pinball tournament were gaming devices, but were not gaming devices if they were not used in such promotions. The problem this has presented to operators in the past is that if they were to undertake a profit-making promotion where they would award prizes, they would be compelled to pay the $250 per machine tax, thus making those pinball machines technically illegal to operate according to most local laws.

However, with the change in the law, pinball tournaments—as well as video card games, and slot machines—will no longer come under this special scrutiny by the IRS.

Cinematronics introduces warranty work allowance program for distributors

Cinematronics has introduced what it claims is the first comprehensive warranty work allowance program in the video game industry.

Under the new warranty program, Cinematronics distributors will not have to wait for the manufacturer to produce new models or clear out old stock. Instead, the program will begin right away.

According to Tom Stroud, Cinematronics vice president, the new warranty policy supercedes any previous kit programs and warranty programs by the El Cajon, California video game firm.

"We are confident that this new warranty policy will greatly improve the service to our operator customers, keep the distributor's cost to the very minimum, and keep the repair work on a local and personalized level," Stroud said.

For each game purchased under the new warranty work allowance program, the distributor will receive a $12.50 warranty allowance on parts and service invoices, and he will not have to wait until the end of the production run to collect this credit. Instead, the distributor's account will be credited at the end of each month to insure operators an uninterrupted flow of income on their new Starhawks (Cinematronics' newest video offering).

In addition to the $12.50 warranty allowance, Cinematronics will provide the distributor with a free CPU board and a free audio board for every thirty games purchased.

"The combination of the warranty allowance and the free incentive boards should more than cover all costs incurred by the distributors in servicing Cinematronics products," Stroud added.

Stroud pointed out that Cinematronics will continue to guarantee all major parts against manufacturing defects for ninety days. Any parts that fail within ninety days of shipment will be replaced or repaired at no charge. Charges will be made to the distributor for all non-warranty repairs sent to Cinematronics after the warranty period at the following flat rates:

CPU ($30)
Display ($45)
Audio ($23)
Power Supply ($30)

Hilligan reported that the 1979 Exposition will feature the latest in electronic games, tournament soccer, foosball, coin-operated music boxes, and many additional spectacular coin-operated games.

Exhibit Chairman Larry Van Brackel and Co-Chairman James H. Hayes report that all of Ohio's major distributors plus many other exhibitors from throughout the nation will be on hand to show their wares to the music and games operators from throughout Ohio, Kentucky, eastern Indiana, southern Michigan, and western Pennsylvania.

The Exposition, closed to the general public, is the largest state-sponsored trade show in the nation and, in addition to the latest games and music boxes, features several educational seminars with prominent speakers from government and industry.
